

Policy Changes Adopted on Second Reading

Title: Distance Education Approvals

The Board of Trustees adopted these policies on second reading at its meeting on February 27, 2014.

Background

In reviewing the initial implementation of the Commission's policy on distance education, Commission staff came to the conclusion that the initiation and expansion categories of approval identified in Commission policy created an overly complex approach to approving distance education. Commission staff drafted a new protocol for evaluating distance education that was more aligned with the approach of other regional accrediting agencies.

Commission staff propose that the Commission approve the first two academic programs, whether degree or certificate programs, offered by an institution through distance education. (Note that the two program threshold is not expressly stated in policy but will be stated in Commission procedural documents; this approach allows for the Commission to change the threshold, if necessary, without revising the policy or to allow for an exception to the two program threshold in rare cases as appropriate.) Once the institution is approved for its first two academic programs, whether the Commission provides that approval through one or two actions, the institution would be able to offer any of its degree and certificate programs through distance education if it so chooses. Any academic program new to the institution would, of course, be subject to the Commission's policy on institutional change and may require approval before it could be offered.

Implementation
